The U.S. government must enforce existing trade obligations and negotiate strong, new trade commitments. The health of the American economy—and millions of patients around the world—hangs in the balance.